COUNTRY SPECIFIC:

Brazil

Iracambi: Where the forest meets the farm (volunteer)

The Atlantic Rainforest is considered one of the world's most globally important biodiversity hotspots, but this has not prevented it from being reduced to only eight fragmented per cent of its former size. The attack on the forest started with the arrival of Europeans in Brazil 500 years ago, and continues today. Iracambi is working to reverse this trend. We believe that it is only by helping to find a future for the people who live and work in the forest, that we can provide a future for the forest itself.
